FPP Kickoff! — October 2

The 2014-15 FPP season gets underway October 2 with the annual Kickoff event, held at the Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center next to Bird Library. Meet fellow FPP participants and faculty from around campus and share food, drink, and conversation.

In addition to FPP news and a preview of coming attractions, the Kickoff features guest speaker Dr. Richard "Rick" Reis of Stanford University, the founding editor of the Tomorrow's Professor blog and e-newsletter—with over 58,000 subscribers and more than 1,400 archived posts, the most widely consulted professional development resource for academics ever to exist! Rick's talk is entitled

Graduate School Grants Available for FPP Programming

FPP stipends are many months away. However, you can still get your hands on cold, hard FPP cash by applying for grants of up to $500 from the Graduate School to support departmental programming open to the FPP community.

Some possible uses include speaker honoraria, travel reimbursement, food, room fees, publicity, and related program costs. Non-programmatic services or projects of value to aspiring academics, such as development of online tools and resources, will also be considered.

FPP participants, faculty, or administrators can make proposals using the easy online Departmental Funding Request Form, or email Glenn Wright (glwright@syr.edu) with a description of the event and its relevance to a general audience of FPP members, a tentative date and location (if applicable), and a budget or explanation of how the money will be used.

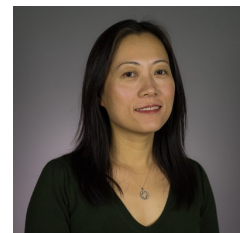

Now accepting proposals for the 2015-16 academic year! Funds are limited so make your pitch soon.

VPA Reboots FPP with Art, Transmedia

Stephanie James

After a one-year hiatus, the School of Art and Department of Transmedia have rekindled the FPP flame, joining Music and Communication and Rhetorical Studies as FPP-participating units within the College of Visual and Performing Arts. Profs. Rebecca Ruige Xu (Transmedia) and Stephanie James (Art) have assumed Primary Faculty Liaison duties (for other incoming PFL's see p. 2). Welcome back Art and Transmedia!
